How will my child be assessed?

) DPLOLHVZ RPJDJW K DWK HE KJLO C knowledge or skills cannot be assessed if they not know English. This is an important concern. New York State, Prekindergarten programs inve in multilingual resources to help assess t children. These resorces include translated assessments and interpretation services.

Prekindergarten teachers are also able to ass children through classroom observation. They consee what children have mastered and what the are still learning through their behaviors dause of materials. Telling the teacher what children condo at home also allows the teacher to bette understand them.

: LOPO, FKLO OF RJOHMX VHG "

No. Bilingual and multilingual individuals, exchildren, can use words in multiple languages express themselves. Sometimes they will comb languages as they speak but this is not a sign confusion. It is not necessary to force the child to separate languages. Instead, adults at home can the home language with the child to continuouilding vocabulary and other guages kills. The child will also combine languages in school, teacher will also allow the child to use the hom language as there elearning English.

When your child brings home projects of assignments to do together, it is helpful to complete them using your home language. In tway, your child does not have to be limited to using the words they know in English. You creinforce what they learn in English at school is