

Making Lincoln's declarations

By Betty R. King
Regents Chancellor

Last month, the Board of Regents celebrated the opening of a new exhibit at the New York State Museum featuring President Lincoln's handwritten draft of the "Preliminary Rights Act of 1964, we have not yet accomplished the formation of a state of social justice. We will not accomplish it until we provide all children with an education that prepares them for the lives.

Every one of these children has the potential to be a leader. We need to focus as intently on this learning and child assessment. Let me share with you some of the ways we can ensure that every child has the opportunity to succeed.

and contemplate the hard work that we should celebrate the progress we have made

Success also requires that schools provide access to essential services such as: prenatal care; medical, dental, government. New York State takes a leadership role in providing these services to all children.

The exhibit is dedicated to my friend, Regent Judith Johnson. Throughout her brilliant career, Judith was a tireless advocate for education, equity and excellence. She understood better than anyone that we can and we will close the achievement gap and ensure that every child has the opportunity to succeed throughout the educational system.

The essence of education involves the teacher, as well as the student, and the community in which they are engaged. We must ensure that all students have access to the resources, coursework, especially those children who have not had the opportunity to succeed.

People. We need to focus as intently on this learning and child assessment. Let me share with you some of the ways we can ensure that every child has the opportunity to succeed.

The Emancipation Proclamation was an executive order in which Lincoln declared that slaves in rebel states were free. It was signed on January 1, 1863, marking the 100th anniversary of the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King. It said, "The great Emancipation Proclamation of 1863 is a landmark in our nation's history. It is a testament to the power of the federal government to bring about the freedom of all people."

pragmatic and equity for every student. To begin with, we need to ensure that every child has the opportunity to succeed.

People. We need to focus as intently on this learning and child assessment. Let me share with you some of the ways we can ensure that every child has the opportunity to succeed.